ABSTRACT

Bulgaria has engaged in reform efforts, in dialogue with the Commission, under the Rule of Law cycle and the Recovery and Resilience Plan, and there have been several legislative developments particularly in the past six months. The Constitutional Court of Bulgaria ruled that parts of the comprehensive constitutional amendments, essential for the organisation of the State, had been adopted by a body not competent to do so, and declared most of the reform unconstitutional. As a result, previous concerns that the reform had aimed to address have reemerged. The provisions dismissed include limits on the Prosecutor General's powers, although the mechanism for the effective accountability and criminal liability of the Prosecutor General and deputies was declared constitutional. The effectiveness of this mechanism is constrained by some procedural issues. As for the Supreme Judicial Council, the Constitutional Court dismissed the overall reform but considered that a restructuring would be possible. The long-term secondment of judges and the functioning of the Inspectorate to the Supreme Judicial Council remain a concern. A draft law to extend judicial review for prosecutorial decisions for cases of termination and suspension of investigations for victimless crimes was tabled. The level of perceived judicial independence in Bulgaria continues to be very low. The law on mandatory meeting for judicial mediation has been adopted. New digital tools have been introduced to improve access to justice. Initial data show that courts perform efficiently when dealing with civil and commercial proceedings.

The implementation of the National Anti-corruption Strategy remains limited. Some steps have been taken to implement the reform of the Commission for Counteracting Corruption and Illegal Assets Forfeiture. Cooperation between national authorities competent in the fight against corruption is overall good, but a robust track-record of high-level corruption cases is yet to be established, as convictions remain limited in numbers and data about prosecutions is inconclusive. Work continues to strengthen integrity in the police and judiciary, but important gaps remain in the rules on the integrity of persons with top executive functions. Rules on asset and interest disclosure for public officials are implemented, although enforcement is lacking. Legislation on lobbying transparency is under preparation and further amendments to the whistleblowers legislation has entered into force. Measures to mitigate the high risks of corruption in public procurement are still insufficient.

Concerns regarding the funding and politisation of the media regulator persist. The draft law aimed at strengthening the independence of public service media was not yet adopted, and the appointment of a new Director-General of the Bulgarian national television continues to be delayed. Despite the existence of several registers, the enforcement of media ownership disclosure obligations remains limited. Improvement has been achieved regarding the transparency in the allocation of state advertising. Indications of political and economic influence over the media remain. Access to public information is improving, although still hindered by previously existing obstacles. Journalists are facing increasing challenges in their activities.

The Constitutional Court was called upon to review the election results in several polling stations. Some independent and regulatory authorities continue to operate with an expired mandate and the renewal procedures have been relaunched. The constitutional amendments limiting the powers of the President in the procedure of appointing an interim government is subject to another constitutionality check. The practical implementation of rules for law-making continues to face challenges, and concerns remain regarding the quality of the legislative process. Attempts to reintroduce legislation requiring the registration of organisations receiving foreign funding were again dismissed by Parliament.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Overall, concerning the recommendations in the 2024 Rule of Law Report, Bulgaria has made:

- No further progress on taking steps to adapt the relevant legislative framework to avoid long-term secondment of judges to fill in vacant positions, taking into account European standards on secondment of judges.
- No further progress on advancing with the draft legislative amendments aiming at improving the functioning of the Inspectorate to the Supreme Judicial Council and avoiding the risk of political influence, in particular by involving judicial bodies in the selection of its members.
- No progress, following the ruling that the procedure used was unconstitutional, in taking forward the plans to adopt a mechanism for introducing safeguards in the appointment procedure of the Parliament-elected members of the Supreme Prosecutorial Council, ensuring their independence and taking into account European standards, particularly in view of the Council's role in the appointment and dismissal of the Prosecutor General.
- No progress yet on ensuring an improved effectiveness of investigations and a robust track record of prosecution and final judgments in high-level corruption cases and some further progress on the institutional reforms of the Anti-Corruption Commission.
- Limited progress on improving the integrity of top executive functions, taking into account European standards, in particular by ensuring that clear integrity standards for the Government as well as an appropriate sanctioning mechanism are in place.
- Some further progress on advancing with the work aimed at improving transparency in the allocation of state advertising, in particular with regard to state advertising contracted through intermediaries, such as media agencies.

On this basis, and considering other developments that took place in the period of reference, in addition to recalling the relevant commitments made under the Recovery and Resilience Plan and the relevant country-specific recommendations under the European Semester, it is recommended to Bulgaria to:

- Take steps to adapt the relevant legislative framework to avoid long-term secondment of judges to fill in vacant positions, taking into account European standards on secondment of judges.
- Advance with the draft legislative amendments aiming at improving the functioning of the Inspectorate to the Supreme Judicial Council and avoiding the risk of political influence, in particular by involving judicial bodies in the selection of its members.
- Re-initiate the process to reform the Supreme Judicial Council, in particular its composition, to ensure its independence and effectiveness, taking into account European standards on Councils for the Judiciary.
- Ensure a robust track record of investigations, prosecutions and final judgments in high-level corruption cases and take further steps to ensure the effective performance of the Anti-Corruption Commission.
- Improve the integrity of top executive functions, taking into account European standards, in particular by ensuring that clear integrity standards for the Government as well as an appropriate sanctioning mechanism are in place.

- Complete the work aimed at improving transparency in the allocation of state advertising, in particular with regard to state advertising contracted through intermediaries, such as media agencies.
- Strengthen the quality of the legislative process by ensuring the use of public consultations and impact assessments for legislative initiatives by Parliament.

I. JUSTICE SYSTEM¹

Independence

The level of perceived judicial independence in Bulgaria continues to be very low among both the general public and companies. Overall, 27% of the general population and of companies perceive the level of independence of courts and judges to be ‘fairly or very good’ in 2025². The perceived judicial independence among the general public has increased in comparison with 2024 (24%) and has decreased in comparison with 2021 (32%). The perceived judicial independence among companies has slightly increased in comparison with 2024 (25%) and has significantly decreased in comparison with 2021 (43%). The main reasons cited by both the general public and companies for the perceived lack of independence of courts and judges are the perception of interference or pressure from the Government and politicians, as well as the interference or pressure from economic or other specific interests³.

The Constitutional Court of Bulgaria ruled that parts of the comprehensive constitutional amendments, essential for the organisation of the State, had been adopted a body not competent to do so, and declared most of the reform unconstitutional. On 20 December 2023, Parliament had adopted comprehensive amendments to the Constitution, aimed at improving judicial independence and addressing long-standing concerns. The reform had changed the Supreme Judicial Council’s composition, explicitly limited the powers of the Prosecutor General at constitutional level⁴, and it also limited certain powers of the President of the Republic regarding the appointment of interim governments⁵. In its judgment of 26 July 2024, the Constitutional Court ruled that several provisions were essential for the organisation of the state, and thus their adoption required a Grand National Assembly⁶, while other provisions were struck down due to their drafting quality, lack of clarity and purpose. While some of the provisions were declared compatible in themselves with the Constitution, the Court struck them down as part of the larger reform being declared unconstitutional⁷. Consequently, the draft new Judicial System Act was not further pursued in Parliament despite some provisions not being affected by the constitutional amendments. As regards the reform limiting the Prosecutor General’s powers, the Constitutional Court ruled that Parliament lacked the competence to make these changes which it deemed essential for the organisation of the state. As for the Prosecutor General, the combination of the powers and position of the Prosecutor General, which allow for disproportionate influence over the Prosecutor's Office and the magistracy as a whole, continue to raise concerns⁸.

The level of perceived judicial independence is categorised as follows: very low (below 30% of respondents perceive judicial independence as fairly good and very good); low (between 30-39%), average (between 40-59%), high (between 60-75%), very high (above 75%).

The mechanism for the effective accountability and criminal liability of the Prosecutor General and his or her deputies was declared compatible with the Constitution. On 26 July 2024, the Constitutional Court published a second judgment concerning the constitutionality of the mechanism for the effective accountability and criminal liability of the Prosecutor General and his or her deputies⁹. The Court considered the mechanism in its entirety compatible with the Constitution, and further explained that due to the position of the Prosecutor General and the powers he has, additional limits to his powers could be imposed through judicial review, which is a step forward in strengthening judicial oversight. However, in the first judgment of the same day, on the constitutional amendments and anchoring the mechanism in the Constitution, the Court considered that such provisions do not belong in the Constitution but in ordinary legislation¹⁰.

Procedural issues remain to be addressed to ensure the full effectiveness of the mechanism for the investigation of the Prosecutor General and his or her deputies. This mechanism addresses long-standing concerns from previous Rule of Law Reports regarding the issue related to the previous lack of a possibility for an effective criminal investigation of the Prosecutor General and his or her deputies, demonstrating Bulgaria's commitment to reform¹¹. It is also subject to an assessment as a milestone in the Recovery and Resilience Plan¹². Procedural issues remain to be addressed to ensure the full effectiveness of the mechanism, linked to the hierarchical and practical independence of the ad hoc prosecutor. The judicial review of a decision not to open an investigation seems to be limited by procedural gaps¹³, and there are decisions that can only proceed with the authorisation of the Prosecutor General and his or her deputies¹⁴. The current ad hoc prosecutor has suggested that the simultaneous appointments of the ad hoc and the controlling ad hoc prosecutors¹⁵ would solve some of the issues and strengthen the independence of this mechanism¹⁶. The Government has agreed that this would increase the effectiveness of the mechanism. Stakeholders, including the Council of Europe, have ¹³ Cases filed by the Prosecutor's Office are not susceptible to a judicial review; in case of a termination of the pre-trial proceedings, the controlling ad hoc prosecutor is appointed to review the decision of termination. However, the provision laying down the precise conditions under which this could happen does not currently exist, and it is impossible to appoint the controlling ad hoc prosecutor (Art. 411d of the CPC mentions the non-existing Art. 243a of the CPC).

pointed out that the ad hoc prosecutor is operational but express some concerns about its impact so far¹⁷.

The Government has tabled a draft law to extend judicial review for prosecutorial decisions for cases of termination and suspension of investigations for victimless crimes. On 27 June 2025, in the context of the Recovery and Resilience Plan, the Government tabled a draft law that would give to a number of state bodies the possibility to challenge decisions suspending or terminating investigations to offences for victimless crimes. This comes as a response to reports by stakeholders that frequent termination of investigations during pre-trial proceedings often goes unchallenged in court due to the absence of effective legal mechanisms to contest such prosecutorial decisions. They consider that this hampers, in particular, the anti-corruption efforts of Bulgaria since this limitation exists only for victimless crimes¹⁸. The draft law is under public consultation until 10 July 2025.

The Sofia City Prosecutor's Office has been restructured but concerns remain regarding the structure for the investigation of magistrates. As previously reported, there are ten prosecutors in Bulgaria responsible for cases concerning offences that may be committed by magistrates. These prosecutors are selected by the administrative head of the Sofia City Prosecutor's Office, who is a direct subordinate to the Prosecutor General, and specialise solely on cases related to magistrates¹⁹. This continues to raise concerns regarding prosecutorial autonomy and possible concerns regarding judicial independence as every prosecutor, investigator or judge could be subject to a criminal investigation²⁰, as recently exemplified by an investigation opened against a first instance court judge for the content of his decisions²¹, and by the investigations against prosecutors as noted by the Council of Europe²². On 28 May 2025, the newly appointed interim administrative head of the Sofia City Prosecutor's Office has ordered a restructuring of the office to create new structures and to centralise the work of the

In relation to the previously introduced judicial review for decisions not to open an investigation, under Art. 213b of the CPC, the Government reported data for 2024: 144 736 files with refusals were resolved, 5 411 confirmed by the upper (district/appellate) prosecutor's office (i.e. potential subject of judicial control), 512 appealed before court).

See also Supreme Judicial Council, Judges' chamber meeting (2024), 15 October 2024 - hearing of magistrates in connection with the alleged influence of organised crime groups in the justice system. There were 800 judges who were investigated by the prosecutor's office, who ultimately decided that they had not committed a crime.

Office²³, though this did not change the dedicated structure for the investigation of magistrates, which was maintained. It is noted that the Sofia City Prosecutor's Office consists of a total of eight units in view of the volume of cases and the specific workload of the prosecutors and their specialisation. On an annual basis the Prosecutor's Office provides data to the Supreme Judicial Council on the number of criminal proceedings against magistrates that is processed in a dedicated register.

The reform regarding the appointment of members to the Supreme Prosecutorial Council was declared unconstitutional, therefore no progress was possible on the recommendation²⁴. The Constitutional Court's judgment also quashed the reform related to the division of the Supreme Judicial Council into two Councils – Supreme Judicial Council for judges, and Supreme Prosecutorial Council for prosecutors. Similarly to the findings of the 2024 Rule of Law Report²⁵, the Court praised the reform for improving the judicial independence by giving judges elected by their peers a better representation in the Supreme Judicial Council. However, the Court did not agree with the high number of Parliament-elected members in the Supreme Prosecutorial Council, considering that this gives the Parliament too much influence over the Supreme Prosecutorial Council and the Prosecutor's office²⁶. As a result, the rules regarding the composition and appointment of members of the Prosecutorial Council reverted to those that existed before the 2023 constitutional amendments with one single Supreme Judicial Council. Consequently, the concerns raised in previous Rule of Law Reports²⁷ as regards the influence of the Prosecutor General in the Supreme Judicial Council, and the fact that judges elected by their peers did not form a majority in the Supreme Judicial Council²⁸ remain unaddressed²⁹. On 15 January 2025, the Parliament adopted amendments to the Judicial System Act forbidding a Supreme Judicial Council with an expired mandate (since October 2022) to elect a new Prosecutor General, and new Presidents of the Supreme Courts, and closed all open or pending procedures for election of these positions³⁰. While the authorities note that these amendments aim to safeguard institutional integrity and prevent decisions being made by anybody with an expired mandate, this further restricts the functioning of the Supreme Judicial Council. The interim Prosecutor General challenged the closure of the election before the Supreme Administrative Court, which sent a request for a constitutionality check, that is still pending³¹. Some of the members of the Supreme Judicial Council, arguing that the findings of the Court of Justice on the Inspectorate to the Supreme Judicial Council working on an expired mandate is also applicable to their institution, have considered that additional constraints on the work of the Supreme Judicial Council, linked to the expired mandate, may be necessary³².

There has been no further progress as regards the functioning and risk of political influence of the Inspectorate to the Supreme Judicial Council (ISJC)³³. The draft new Judicial System Act, which was published for public consultation in July 2024 was no longer pursued following the Constitutional Court judgment declaring most of the reform unconstitutional. New draft amendments to the Judicial System Act were published for a public consultation on 19 December 2024³⁴. These draft amendments also tried to address the previously reported concerns with the ISJC, notably as regards its functioning and the risk of political influence, as the Parliament is the only institution involved at all stages of the appointment procedure. These draft amendments were not pursued further by the new Government appointed in January 2025, and no further steps have been taken to continue this workstrand. In the context of a preliminary ruling request, the Court of Justice ruled that the principle of judicial independence precludes a practice in which a judicial body, such as the ISJC, is working beyond the expiry of its mandate without an express legal basis for this, and without this extension of mandate being limited in time³⁵. As a result, there has been no further progress on the recommendation made in the 2024 Rule of Law Report.

There has been no further progress to avoid long-term secondment of judges to fill vacant positions³⁶. Even though the issue of long-term secondment was not covered in the Constitutional Court judgment of July 2024, and draft provisions to remove the possibility of seconding a judge to a vacant position for undetermined period of time had been prepared, concrete legislative plans have not been taken forward in this area. The widespread use of secondments may have a negative effect on seconded magistrates if they are faced with the risk of termination of their secondment³⁷. European standards in this area highlight that secondments of judges with or without consent require the necessary guarantees to prevent the risk of judicial independence being jeopardised³⁸, particularly when a secondment is terminated without the judge's consent³⁹. Against this background, there has been no further progress on the recommendation made in the 2024 Rule of Law Report.

The ad hoc committees created to investigate cases of intimidation of magistrates and possible infiltration of the judiciary have concluded their work. The parliamentary committee could not adopt a final report due to lack of quorum and the committee was not reinstated after the last elections in October 2024⁴⁰. The judiciary committee established by the Judges' chamber of the SJC has finished the inquiry and is working on a report on this issue, set to be published by July 2025. At the same time the Prosecutor's Office terminated the pre-trial proceedings against a suspect allegedly linked to these organised crime groups⁴¹.

Quality

The law on mandatory meeting for judicial mediation has been adopted and includes proceedings relevant for businesses. On 1 July 2024, the law on mandatory judicial mediation was declared unconstitutional by the Constitutional Court⁴². According to the Court, the mandatory aspect of the mediation violates the right to access a court and to effective judicial protection as guaranteed by the Constitution⁴³. The Ministry of Justice has prepared a new draft law, which would align the legislation on judicial mediation with the requirements set by the Constitutional Court. It also intends to address the reform of the mediation framework in Bulgaria's Recovery and Resilience Plan⁴⁴. The aim is for a certain number of civil and commercial proceedings to be preceded by a mandatory information session on mediation, instead of mandatory mediation. Legislation tabled in Parliament in May 2025 sets out the cases where it would be possible for courts to oblige the parties to hold mediation sessions⁴⁵. On 27 June 2025, the draft law was adopted at second reading by Parliament, and it will be published in the State Gazette and will subsequently enter into force.

New digital tools to improve access to justice have been introduced, while electronic communication tools are still lacking. The authorities have introduced new digital tools to improve access to justice⁴⁶. In some civil and commercial cases, it is now possible to initiate proceedings online and it is possible to file an application for legal aid online in civil, commercial, and administrative cases. Availability of electronic communication tools is still limited to the prosecution, and as for the courts, electronic communication is only possible between courts but not with other actors in the justice system (e.g. notaries,

On 10 June 2025, the Government tabled a draft law related to the digitalisation of administrative justice. The draft aims at streamlining proceedings and ensuring that actions, such as remote open court hearings and the electronic submission of requests, are effectively implemented⁴⁹.

Efficiency

The courts perform efficiently when dealing with civil and commercial proceedings. Following the positive development announced in the 2024 Rule of Law Report, for the first time Bulgaria was able to report disaggregated data on the disposition time of civil and commercial litigious proceedings for 2023. According to the 2025 EU Justice Scoreboard, it takes on average 186 days to resolve a civil or commercial case, which means that courts generally deal efficiently with their caseload. This new data also allows to observe the performance of the courts in all three instances. It appears that while cases at third instance on average take up to 249 days to be resolved, cases at first and second instance courts take respectively 186 and 138 days to be resolved⁵⁰. Nevertheless, more long-term reporting is needed to establish whether Bulgaria's efforts regarding the efficiency of its courts could have a positive impact on both citizens and businesses. However, at this stage, some businesses consider the efficiency of the justice system as a barrier for them⁵¹.

II. ANTI-CORRUPTION FRAMEWORK

The perception among citizens, experts and business executives is that the level of corruption in the public sector remains high. In the 2024 Corruption Perceptions Index by Transparency International, Bulgaria scores 43/100 and ranks 26th in the European Union and 76th globally⁵². This perception has been relatively stable over the past five years⁵³. The 2024 Special Eurobarometer on Corruption shows that 80% of respondents consider corruption widespread in their country (EU average 69%) and 32% of respondents feel personally affected by corruption in their daily lives (EU average 30%). As regards businesses, 89% of companies consider that corruption is widespread (EU average 63%) and 55% consider that corruption is a problem when doing business (EU average 35%). Furthermore, 18% of respondents find that there are enough successful prosecutions to deter people from corrupt practices (EU average 36%), while

⁴⁹ This reform is part of Milestone 215 of the Recovery and Resilience Plan.

⁵² The level of perceived corruption is categorised as follows: low (above 79); relatively low (between 79-60), relatively high (between 59-50), high (below 50).

⁵³ In 2020 the score was 44, while in 2024 the score was 45. The score significantly increases/decreases when it changes more than five points; improves/deteriorates (changes between 4-5 points); is relatively stable (changes from 1-3 points) in the last five years.

8% of companies believe that people and businesses caught for bribing a senior official are appropriately punished (EU average 33%)⁵⁴.

The implementation of the National Strategy for the Prevention and Countering of Corruption 2021-2027 remains limited. The ongoing implementation of the National Strategy for the Prevention and Countering of Corruption 2021-2027 and related Roadmap has not continued in a structured and systematic manner as regards all of its priorities⁵⁵. Annual reports on the implementation of the Strategy have not been prepared for 2023 and 2024 while the Government has committed to improving monitoring and reporting to ensure greater transparency⁵⁶. The proposals for a mid-term revision of the Strategy, which were prepared by an interministerial working group and discussed at the meeting of the National Council on Anti-Corruption Policies in October 2023, were not further pursued by the Council of Ministers⁵⁷. The National Council on Anti-Corruption Policies has not been convened since October 2023. Furthermore, civil society continues to criticise the absence of a sufficiently thorough and evidence-based needs analysis for the implementation and the revision of the current strategy⁵⁸. The implementation of measures set out in sectoral anti-corruption plans has continued.

Some further progress has been made to implement the reform dividing the Commission for Counteracting Corruption and Illegal Assets Forfeiture⁵⁹. As reported in 2024, the Commission for Counteracting Corruption and Illegal Assets Forfeiture had been divided into two separate bodies (the Anti-Corruption Commission and the Commission for Illegal Assets Forfeiture)⁶⁰. The three-member leadership of the new Anti-Corruption Commission ('ACC'), intended to be in place by January 2024, still needs to be appointed⁶¹. This remains an important step for the effective implementation of the law. Draft rules of procedure for an independent Nomination Committee have been submitted to Parliament⁶². The Government and the ACC have noted that the ACC is fully functional⁶³. Specialised administrative and operational capacity, including ⁶² The law gives both Parliament and civil society organisations the right to nominate candidates, which have to fulfil certain criteria. According to a draft law submitted to the Parliament on 2 July 2025, candidates then have to be appointed by the Parliament by simple majority - more than half of the votes of members present, in line with Decision 13/2024 of the Constitutional Court.

⁵⁹ The 2024 Rule of Law Report recommended to Bulgaria to '[e]nsure a robust track record of investigations [...] in high-level corruption cases and the effective performance of the Anti-Corruption Commission.'

⁶⁰ See 2024 Rule of Law Report, Bulgaria, p. 16.

experienced investigators, has been built up to support the investigative functions of the ACC and it disposes of its own budget⁶⁴. In 2024, a total of 820 signals and 245 pre-trial proceedings have been received and initiated by the investigative inspectors at the specialised Anti-Corruption Directorate⁶⁵. However, stakeholders have underlined the importance of the new procedure for appointment of the ACC leadership for its credibility. A recent ruling of the Sofia Administrative Court annulled a decision of the ACC on the ground that the decision was taken by a body which was not established in compliance with the Law on Countering Corruption, due to Parliament's failure to appoint its new leadership within the three-month deadline set by that law⁶⁶. An appeal against the ruling before the Supreme Administrative Court is pending⁶⁷. Given the fact that the ACC is functioning and steps towards the adoption of rules of procedure of the Nomination Committee were taken, there is some further progress as regards the functioning of the ACC in the recommendation in the 2024 Rule of Law Report.

There has been no progress yet in establishing a robust track-record of high-level corruption cases, as convictions remain limited in numbers and data about prosecutions is inconclusive⁶⁸. In 2024, the Supreme Court of Cassation delivered judgments in four corruption cases against high-level officials⁶⁹. One of these cases resulted in a suspended sentence, two were terminated due to expiry of the statute of limitations, and one was referred back to the court of appeal⁷⁰. In May 2024, the Prosecutor General submitted to Parliament its second annual activity report on combating corruption where it reports in relation to corruption. According to the report there were 70 new pre-trial proceedings, 10 indictments and 4 sentences in 2024 concerning high-level officials⁷¹. Stakeholders continue to question the prosecution's record on high-level corruption, with charges not brought or inadequately brought forward even in cases of well-substantiated allegations or publicly available evidence⁷².

This case has been suspended awaiting the ruling which the Court of Justice of the European Union is to give on a preliminary reference submitted by the Supreme Administrative Court in case 7373/2024 (C-611/24, pending). Many other decisions of the Commission, adopted after the expiry of the three-month period for the election of a new leadership of the ACC, have been confirmed by administrative courts.

See also 2024 Rule of Law Report, Bulgaria, p. 18. Stakeholders also raised concerns that over the past year investigations and prosecutions were initiated selectively against representatives of specific political parties. See Joint CSO contribution (2025), written input, pp. 10-11.

Similar concerns have been expressed by GRECO⁷³. Prosecutors continue to attribute the lack of results to the outdated and overly formalistic Code of Criminal Procedure, as well as the inconsistent efforts of corruption investigators, while no specific actions that could be taken by the Prosecutor's Office to build a robust track-record were identified⁷⁴. Efforts to ensure accurate reporting, including disaggregated data, on high-level corruption are underway⁷⁵. The detection, investigation and prosecution of foreign bribery cases is seen as ineffective and continues to be criticised by the OECD⁷⁶. Legislative amendments aiming to improve the legal framework on foreign bribery were adopted by Parliament in June 2025⁷⁷. On this basis, it is not possible to conclude that there are sufficient concrete results in establishing a robust track record of investigations, prosecution and final judgments in high-level corruption cases, and as such there has been no progress yet on the implementation of this part of the recommendation.

Cooperation between national authorities competent on the fight against corruption is overall good. The Ministry of Interior, the Anti-Corruption Commission and prosecutors report that there is effective cooperation on anti-corruption investigations⁷⁸. In 2024, the National Audit Office (NAO) submitted seven audit reports to the prosecution service on suspicions of criminal activity. In the past year, the prosecution service has terminated inspections related to 6 NAO reports, whereas investigations continue on 11 other reports⁷⁹. Comprehensive information has not been provided by the Prosecutor's Office as regards the reasons for terminating inspections⁸⁰. The European Public Prosecutor's Office (EPPO) reported 19 corruption cases among its open cases in Bulgaria in 2024⁸¹. In March 2025, the EPPO opened an administrative inquiry into possible wrongdoing by the European Prosecutor from Bulgaria, who was also temporarily suspended⁸².

Further measures have been taken to strengthen integrity in the police and the judiciary. In 2024, the Ministry of Interior ensured enhanced supervision of officials in charge of road traffic, registration of vehicles, provision of security services and border control to prevent corruption within these bodies. Implementation of the 2024 Anti-Corruption Plan of the Ministry of Interior has continued, including measures aiming to address corruption risks in public procurement, rotation of staff in high-risk sectors, video surveillance and training⁸³. Other positive developments include the adoption of rules on donations and a revised code of ethics for the police. However, as reported by GRECO, the operational independence of the police from the Ministry of Interior remains insufficient, a dedicated anti-corruption strategy for the police is still lacking and promotion and recruitment procedures need to be improved⁸⁴. As regards the judiciary, in December 2024, the codes of ethics for judges and prosecutors were further aligned with Venice Commission recommendations⁸⁵. Nevertheless, complementary rules clearly defining disciplinary offences, as well as rules of conduct for prosecutors and investigators faced with instructions that they believe to be wrong or illegal, are lacking⁸⁶. In 2024, the Inspectorate to the Supreme Judicial Council (ISJC) continued to provide training courses to magistrates, covering issues related to conflicts of interest and the application of the codes of ethics⁸⁷. The ISJC initiated 18 inspections for integrity and conflicts of interest, resulting in one disciplinary proceeding⁸⁸. Work is ongoing on the finalisation of a code of ethics for state-owned enterprises⁸⁹.

There has been limited progress to strengthen the integrity of persons with top executive functions⁹⁰. There are still no rules on integrity checks and on incompatibilities of persons hired as advisers to senior political officials, and there is no comprehensive code of conduct and enforcement mechanism for persons in top executive functions⁹¹. Integrity provisions for top executive functions remain fragmented, with various institutions having differing provisions⁹². Clear rules on the declaration of gifts to persons in top executive functions are also lacking⁹³. The interministerial working group, set up at the start of 2024, did not advance further with the preparation of a code of conduct for top functions, as envisaged in the Anti-Corruption Strategy⁹⁴. The Chief Inspectorate and various ministerial inspectorates do not have the appropriate functional independence to effectively fulfil their role in prevention and detection of corruption⁹⁵. The new Government Programme for the period 2025-2029 includes measures to improve integrity among persons holding public office in the central executive branch and to guarantee the functional independence of the inspectorates. In March, a new interministerial working group was set up to prepare, by 30 September 2025, draft amendments to the Law on Administration and a Code of Conduct for persons holding public positions in the central executive branch. The legislative amendments will set out an obligation for the Council of Ministers to adopt a Code of Conduct for persons holding public office in the central executive branch⁹⁶. As some initial steps have been taken to improve the integrity framework for persons in top executive functions, there has been limited progress on the recommendation made in the 2024 Rule of Law Report.

The rules on asset and interest disclosure for public officials are implemented but doubts remain on the extent and effectiveness of verifications and sanctions. The Anti-Corruption Commission has continued implementing the rules on the disclosure of assets and interests⁹⁷. The draft regulation on the declaration of assets of certain public officials which was previously reported on was not further pursued⁹⁸. The ACC reports that it has sufficient resources to accomplish its verification tasks and that it conducts in-depth reviews, including complete income and asset analyses comparing the declared circumstances with data available in the public and other state registers⁹⁹. The Anti-corruption Fund points out structural issues related to verifications, which they find to be formalistic, superficial and non-dissuasive, as well as lacking an in-depth assessment of whether the income justifies declared assets¹⁰⁰. The annual reports of the Anti-Corruption Commission provide publicly available information on fines imposed in relation to delays in the submission of asset declarations. The ACC referred five cases to the National Revenue Agency and six cases to the Commission for Illegal Assets Forfeiture ('CIAF') for detected inconsistencies¹⁰¹. Concerns over the lack of results of the asset and interest declaration system, which was not reformed, remain valid¹⁰².

Legislation on lobbying transparency is under preparation. In light of the Government's commitment to adopt legislative measures to regulate lobbying, in November 2024, the Ministry of Justice set up a working group to prepare a legislative proposal¹⁰³. While the draft law is not publicly available, civil society organisations continue to participate actively in this work¹⁰⁴. NAO is envisaged as the body that would possibly manage a future transparency register¹⁰⁵.

⁹⁶ The Code of conduct would include guidelines on conflicts of interest contacts with third parties, gifts and other benefits, additional activities, contracts with state bodies, post-employment restrictions. The draft amendments would also establish a supervisory mechanism for the implementation of the code, providing for precise sanctions for violations and instruments for their enforcement.

Audits on political party and campaign financing continue. NAO remains responsible for carrying out audits of the annual accounts of political parties, which are also required to share a list of donors¹⁰⁶. In 2024, NAO carried out six audits related to political party and campaign financing, one of which is still ongoing. Given that several snap elections were carried out in the past years, NAO's resources remain under strain. Information on donors, donations made, and other information related to the campaign is submitted and analysed via the Unified Electoral Code Register. In 2024, NAO adopted 59 administrative acts and fines amounting to EUR 25 000 due to administrative violations of the electoral code¹⁰⁷. In the context of the October electoral campaign, the Ministry of Interior received 984 reports of irregularities, mainly corruption-related, leading to 128 pre-trial proceedings. This is an increase of 58.2% compared to the parliamentary elections in June 2024¹⁰⁸.

Further amendments to the legislation for the protection of whistleblowers have been adopted by Parliament The amendments, largely aimed at aligning the current legislative framework for the protection of whistleblowers with the EU Whistleblowers Directive were adopted by Parliament on 30 April 2025 and have entered into force¹⁰⁹. Amongst others, the amendments seek to address the narrow personal scope of protection and the temporal limitation precluding investigations for breaches committed more than two years before the reporting. This commitment is also included in Bulgaria's RRP¹¹⁰. The Commission for Data Protection remains the competent authority to oversee whistleblower protection. It regularly updates publicly available information on its website, along with detailed answers to frequently asked questions (see statistics). The Anti-Corruption Commission is then the main body which receives and investigates reports of corruption involving senior public officials¹¹¹. Civil society organisations continue to play a role in promoting the protection of whistleblowers and fostering a culture of safe and effective whistleblowing¹¹². Some civil society organisations are, however, still critical of the fact that the Commission for Data Protection is the competent authority to oversee whistleblower protection and point out that the whistleblowing system in place since 2023 has only resulted in few reports¹¹³.

Discussions on the fulfilment of this milestone are ongoing.

Measures to mitigate the high risks of corruption in public procurement are still insufficient. Corruption has been flagged as one of the main barriers for businesses in a survey conducted by the Bulgarian Industry Association among 738 companies¹¹⁴. Businesses' attitudes towards corruption in the EU show that 35% of companies in Bulgaria (EU average 25%) think that corruption has prevented them from winning a public tender or a public procurement contract in practice in the last three years¹¹⁵. Moreover, only 30% of companies perceive the level of independence of the public procurement review body (Commission on Protection of Competition) as very or fairly good¹¹⁶. The Single Market and Competitiveness Scoreboard on access to public procurement in Bulgaria reports 37% of single bids for 2023 (EU average 29%). As such, public procurement continues to be considered as an area at high risk of corruption, in addition to the management of public property, management of EU funds and the conclusion of concession contracts¹¹⁷. In 2024, NAO detected 153 irregularities in the application of the public procurement legislation and issued 67 administrative sanctions, 49 of which concern mayors and their deputies¹¹⁸. The most frequent irregularities that have been reported concern setting terms that unreasonably restrict certain participants; non-compliance with the provisions of the Public Procurement Act when determining the award criteria; non-application of the legal procedure for awarding public procurement; subdivision of public procurement, which leads to awarding under a more simplified procedure; selection of negotiated procedures with a limited number of participants or with only one participant in non-compliance with the requirements of the Public Procurement Act¹¹⁹. Public procurement policy has not included dedicated measures to combat corruption¹²⁰. The Government has committed to develop targeted measures to strengthen public procurement by focusing on competitive and transparent practices¹²¹.

III. MEDIA PLURALISM AND MEDIA FREEDOM

Concerns regarding the funding and politisation of the media regulator persist. The appointment procedure for members of the Council of Electronic Media (CEM) relies on shared competences for Parliament and the President of Bulgaria¹²². Following the expiration of the last chairperson's mandate in September 2024, and an absence of a voting majority for electing a new chairperson, CEM was led by temporary acting heads on a rotational basis¹²³. On 22 April 2025, a new chair was elected for a one-year term. The 2025 Media Pluralism Monitor and other stakeholders noted risks of political pressure or influence¹²⁴. The regulator indicated that its operations continue to be hindered due to significant and systematic budgetary challenges, even in light of the upcoming implementation of the European Media Freedom Act¹²⁵.

The draft law to strengthen independence of public service media was not adopted and the Council for Electronic Media has not yet appointed a new Director-General of the Bulgarian national television. There has been no progress in adopting the envisaged revision of the law intended to define in more detail the public service remit and the related financing which was planned to be presented in Parliament in 2024, though a dedicated working group within the Ministry of Culture continues to pursue this issue¹²⁶. While CEM elected a new Director-General of the Bulgarian national radio (BNR) for a second three-year term in 2024, the election of a new Director-General of the Bulgarian national television (BNT) was further delayed due to legal disputes on the results of the 2022 competition, for which a final decision was issued by the Supreme Administrative Court in June 2025¹²⁷. In line with the judgement ordering the re-launch of the appointment procedure, the Government has committed to a permanent appointment in compliance with national law¹²⁸. The current Director-General remains in the position ad interim. Stakeholders continue to note that this situation contributes to uncertainty and possibly undermines the independence of the broadcaster¹²⁹.

There are still shortcomings regarding the enforcement of media ownership disclosure obligations despite the existence of several registers. In addition to the CEM public register covering media ownership structures of radio and television operators, the Ministry of Culture hosts a public register based on declarations made by any media outlet of its beneficial ownership and the funding received from public funds, political parties, etc¹³⁰. There are concerns that this regulatory framework is not sufficiently enforced since, despite the lack of disclosure of ultimate owners by some media companies, no fines as foreseen by the law have been imposed in 2024 despite violations being reported by stakeholders¹³¹. Another issue is the lack of disclosure of ownership of websites that are not considered media outlets and therefore fall outside the current scope of media law, reportedly spreading disinformation and propaganda operating almost anonymously notwithstanding their increasing audience¹³².

There has been some further progress on the recommendation regarding transparency in the allocation of state advertising¹³³. The amendments to the Public Procurement Act adopted in October 2023¹³⁴ have improved transparency when awarding state advertising to radio and television broadcasters and on-demand media services¹³⁵. Still, those amendments do not apply to contracts below a certain threshold¹³⁶ or contracts through intermediaries (media agencies). In addition, there is no compulsory legal requirement for media advertising contracts to be concluded through public procurement, and allocation of state advertising is not being annually monitored and reported by a centralised authority¹³⁷. Moreover, concerns remain regarding the use of state advertising as a means to buy influence, notably with regard to online media receiving funding from political parties to cover election campaigns¹³⁸. Furthermore, as a positive development in the specific remit of online platforms, the Ministry of Tourism has been publishing on its website monthly reports for their spending on advertising on these platforms¹³⁹. Some further progress has been made at improving transparency in the allocation of state advertising.

Indications of political and economic influence over the media remain. The 2025 Media Pluralism Monitor notes that there has been no improvement in this context, highlighting the existence of several party-affiliated audiovisual media in the country¹⁴⁰. This view is shared by stakeholders who point to political influence in editorial policies, notably in cases where privately owned media have ownership interests in other regulated sectors, including due to the fact that some of the biggest companies are internationally owned¹⁴¹. A survey conducted at the end of 2024 also shows an increase in political pressure, including on media advertising and particularly at local and regional levels¹⁴². The lack of regulation of online media and the purchase of local and regional media by municipal administrations underpin the criticism of how public funds are used to fund private media and further undermine the media market plurality, leading to “media deserts”, particularly at the local level¹⁴³. There are still no specific provisions governing cross-ownership of media companies or addressing media concentrations and their impact on media pluralism or editorial independence¹⁴⁴.

Access to public information is improving, despite some continuing difficulties. Improved budget and good practices in terms of financial transparency on public institutions’ websites, updated internal rules on access to information and improved management of internal information systems have been reported by civil society¹⁴⁵. However, administrative refusals by state institutions and selective engagement are still reported by stakeholders, in spite of the Access to Public Information Act, with several ongoing court cases filed due to such refusals¹⁴⁶.

Journalists are facing increasing challenges in their activities. Several reports¹⁴⁷ indicate an increasing number of cases of threats to media professionals in 2024 compared to 2023, including by public and political actors, with most incidents having taken place in public places during electoral periods. Since the 2024 Rule of Law Report, two new alerts regarding physical attacks to the safety and integrity of journalists and to their harassment and intimidation were registered on the Council of Europe Platform to promote the protection of journalism and safety of journalists¹⁴⁸. There were also six alerts reported by the Media Freedom Rapid Response mechanism relating to physical assaults and intimidation and harassment¹⁴⁹. As reported by stakeholders, the number of lawsuits against journalists continues to increase, though most of the reported cases have been decided against the plaintiffs¹⁵⁰. Due to the parliamentary elections in October 2024 and the establishment of a new Government in January 2025, the legal reform prepared by the working group tasked with drafting legislative measures to introduce protections against SLAPPs was delayed¹⁵¹. Beyond lawsuits, stakeholders highlight an overall worsening of verbal attacks against journalists in political discourse, targeting both individual journalists and media service providers and including persistent online harassment of journalists, as well as the rise in hate speech against women journalists and fact-checkers¹⁵². In December 2024, a political party submitted a draft law in Parliament which would have the effect of restricting the possibility for journalists of receiving funding from foreign sources¹⁵³. The draft law was dismissed by Parliament on 5 February 2025. Following legislative reforms to the Criminal Code concerning insult and defamation in 2023, a legislative proposal for lower penalties for defamation has been submitted by the Council of Ministers to the National Assembly for adoption¹⁵⁴.

IV. OTHER INSTITUTIONAL ISSUES RELATED TO CHECKS AND BALANCES

The Constitutional Court reviewed the election results in several polling stations. After the October 2024 parliamentary elections, a group of members of Parliament seized the Constitutional Court to review the election results in several polling stations, following concerns that voter fraud has occurred, and to recount the votes in case irregularities were found¹⁵⁵. In its judgment of 14 March 2025, the Constitutional Court found that the election of 16 members of Parliament was illegal¹⁵⁶. This led to a recalculation of the seats and the parties represented in Parliament.

Some independent and regulatory authorities continue to operate with an expired mandate and the Government has now relaunched the renewal procedures. Since the new Government was appointed on 16 January 2025¹⁵⁷, it has launched the procedures for the renewal of mandates of several independent and regulatory authorities, including the positions of Ombudsperson and Deputy Ombudsperson that have been vacant since January 2024¹⁵⁸. The appointment of four authorities was completed¹⁵⁹. However, there is still a significant number of authorities working on an expired mandate¹⁶⁰. Concerns have been raised as to the increased potential risk that the lack of secure tenure accentuates the potential political influence over decisions of some of these authorities¹⁶¹. Moreover, the Constitutional Court judgment of 26 July 2024 declared incompatible with the Constitution the provision declaring that Parliament respects the principles of openness, transparency, publicity, and justification in the selection of the members of the bodies that are wholly or partially elected by it, in order to guarantee their independence¹⁶². In 2024, the Commission noted that the political crisis in the country showed vulnerabilities with the way independent and regulatory authorities are appointed¹⁶³.

The constitutional amendments limiting the powers of the President in the procedure of appointing an interim government is subject to another amounted to unjustified pressure on the Court. Stakeholders voiced concern on the grounds of respect for the separation of powers.

¹⁵⁶ Constitutional Court, Decision No. 1 of 13 March 2025.

¹⁵⁸ Ombudsperson; Commission for Personal Data Protection; National Competition Authority; National Social Security Institute.

¹⁵⁹ Financial Supervision Committee; National Social Security; Bulgarian Fiscal Council; Energy and Water Regulatory Commission.

¹⁶⁰ As of 15 April 2025, these are: Supreme Judicial Council and the Inspectorate to it; Commission for Public Oversight of Statutory Auditors; Committee for disclosing the documents of the State Security and intelligence services of the Army; Commission for Protection against Discrimination; Public Enterprises and Control Agency; National Council of the Bulgarians living abroad. There are also authorities for which the mandate was prematurely terminated or have been reformed: Anti-corruption Commission, and Commission for Illegal Assets Forfeiture; National Bureau for Control over Special Intelligence Means. In the context of a preliminary ruling request, the Court of Justice ruled that the principle of judicial independence precludes a practice in which a judicial body, such as the ISJC, is working beyond the expiry of its mandate without an express legal basis for this, and without this extension of mandate being limited in time. CJEU, Judgment of 30 April 2025, Inspektorat kam Visshia sadeben savet, Joined Cases C-313/23, C-316/23 and C-332/23, EU:C:2025:303, points 81-97.

¹⁶¹ For some authorities, there could be potential risk of institutions being more likely to take decisions in line with the predicted position of the authorities responsible for renewing their mandates given the threat of sudden termination of the already expired mandate. See 2024 Rule of Law Report, Bulgaria, pp. 31-32. In addition to the example of last report on the National Audit Office, the dismissal of the National Social Security by the Parliament was also declared unconstitutional. See Constitutional Court, Decision No. 5 of 24 September 2024.

¹⁶² The Court considered that the wording of the provision created a double regime for the election of bodies whose appointment procedure is outlined in the Constitution (such as the Supreme Judicial Council and the Inspectorate to it).

constitutionality check. The constitutionality of the 2023 reform, which restricted the choice of the President of the Republic when appointing an interim government was among the provisions on which the Constitutional Court judgment of 26 July 2024 could not reach a conclusion¹⁶⁴. Following the October 2024 parliamentary elections and the new appointment of a judge to the Constitutional Court, a group of members of Parliament requested a new constitutionality check of this reform¹⁶⁵. There has not yet been a decision.

Problems over the practical implementation of rules for law-making continue, and concerns regarding the quality of the legislative process persist. As previously reported¹⁶⁶, improved rules for law-making in Parliament have been adopted and continue to be in place¹⁶⁷. However, the practical implementation of these rules continues to raise some concerns¹⁶⁸. Since the majority of legislative amendments have been proposed directly by members of Parliament¹⁶⁹, these do not go through the same mandatory procedure as for government initiatives, including as regards impact assessment and public consultations¹⁷⁰. In that context, stakeholders continued to express criticism that the impact assessment and public consultations carried out by the members of Parliament are often done *pro forma*¹⁷¹. As regards the public consultations, according to a study prepared by Parliament, in 94% of the draft laws there is no information about public consultations or discussions organised to determine the problems and reasons necessitating the adoption of the draft law. In 94.2% of the draft laws, the arguments and different points of view of the stakeholders were not included, and in 65% there was no analysis on the compatibility of the draft laws with EU law¹⁷². Stakeholders also reported that the practice of introducing legislative changes through amendments to other, unrelated, acts between the first and the second reading has been used again, although sporadically¹⁷³. Frequent changes to the legislation have been flagged as one of the key barriers for businesses¹⁷⁴.

Less than half of the companies surveyed in Bulgaria express high levels of confidence in the effectiveness of investment protection. 41% of companies are very or fairly confident that investments are protected by law and courts¹⁷⁵. The main reasons among companies for their lack of confidence are the difficulty to challenge administrative decisions in court (34%) and the concerns about the quality of the law-making process and the quality (30%), efficiency or independence of justice (34%)¹⁷⁶. Moreover, only 34% perceive the level of independence of the national competition authority (Commission on Protection of Competition) as very or fairly good¹⁷⁷. A number of judicial mechanisms are in place at the level of the Supreme Administrative Court to ensure the implementation of administrative court judgments, which include fines for responsible officials for non-compliance. However, these mechanisms do not include the possibility to quash administrative decisions for continued non-compliance with court's instructions, to issue binding orders to the administration to perform or refrain from administrative acts, or to award direct or consequential damages or compensation¹⁷⁸.

On 1 January 2025, Bulgaria had 89 leading judgments of the European Court of Human Rights pending implementation, the same number as the previous year¹⁷⁹. At that time, Bulgaria's rate of leading judgments from the past 10 years that had been implemented was at 46% (compared to 47% in 2024; 54% remained pending), and the average time that the judgments had been pending implementation was 7 years and 3 months (compared to 6 years and 9 months in 2024)¹⁸⁰. The oldest leading judgment, pending implementation for 20 years, concerns the poor conditions of detention in remand facilities and prisons, and the lack of an effective remedy to complain about such conditions. Nonetheless, it is noted that in 2024, the Committee of Ministers acknowledged the significant progress achieved by the State in this judgment¹⁸¹. As regards the respect of payment deadlines, on 31 December 2024 there were 9 cases in total awaiting confirmation of payments (compared to 13 in 2023)¹⁸². On 16 June 2025, the number of leading judgments pending implementation had increased to 92¹⁸³.

The members of the Council for Civil Society Development are being renewed. After the new Government took office on 16 January 2025, the Council for Civil Society Development was able to resume its work. However, since the mandate of its members

The Committee noted that the authorities have adopted in recent years numerous measures, which have enabled the almost complete eradication of overcrowding, even though the overall capacity of the prisons and prison hostels has decreased, and have allowed significant improvement in the material conditions of detention. The Committee decided to continue the supervision of the remaining questions regarding overcrowding, outdoors activities for persons detained in Investigation Detention Facilities and further improvement of material conditions of detention in the context of the Kehayov case under the standard supervision procedure. expired, on 28 March 2025, the Government started a procedure for the selection of new members¹⁸⁴. The draft decision on the renewal of the Council is currently being assessed at interdepartmental level, following which the decision can be adopted by the Government. Once the decision adopted, the Council will start its activities. The Council's main tasks are to conduct an annual review of the needs and challenges faced by civil society organisations; to monitor the implementation of the civil society strategy; and to develop a national funding mechanism for civil society. However, to date, no such reviews have been published or conducted by the Council; no civil society strategy is currently in place, as the last one expired in 2015; and the work on developing the national funding mechanism was not finalised¹⁸⁵. In response to this, civil society organisations have called for action, including advocating for amendments to the Council's rules of procedure to ensure its continuity and effective functioning. Currently, there is cooperation and dialogue between the Secretariat of the Civil Society Development Council and the civic sector. Amendments to the Rules of Procedure for the Organisation and Activities of the Council are being prepared, in order to adapt them to the Law on Non-Profit Legal Entities, ensuring its continuity and effective functioning.

Attempts to reintroduce legislation requiring the registration of organisations receiving foreign funding were again dismissed by Parliament. Civic space in Bulgaria continues to be rated as narrowed¹⁸⁶. Another draft law for the registration of 'foreign agents' was resubmitted to Parliament by members of Parliament on 11 November 2024. The previous drafts that were tabled in recent past legislatures have either been dismissed or have lapsed due to the end of the Parliament's mandate¹⁸⁷. Shortly after the new Government took office, on 5 February 2025, the new draft law was discussed in Parliament, where it was dismissed following a vote. Stakeholders expressed concerns that some of the aspects of the controversial draft foreign agents act could be tabled again or introduced through another legal act¹⁸⁸. Some stakeholders report that a law adopted in 2024 prohibiting acts related to 'propaganda for non-traditional sexual orientation' in schools and in their vicinity¹⁸⁹ has had the effect of schools and teachers not engaging with CSOs working in the field of LGBTIQ rights, including on topics such as health¹⁹⁰.

¹⁸⁷ Since 2020, there have been five draft laws for the registration of foreign agents that have been tabled in Parliament. Three of them have lapsed due to the dissolution of the Parliament and subsequent snap elections, and two in 2023 and 2025 have been dismissed by the Parliament.
