The Commission presented the state of play as regards the SIS II project, stressing that the preliminary results of the Milestone 2 tests were very positive and that the central system had demonstrated full stability. The Milestone 2 tests results still needed to be validated.

DE, supported by AT, queried the basis for the Commission's assessment in the absence of the SFR II test tools. FR stated that the SFR II test tools had been made available to the Commission on 27 April. The Commission replied that these tools were not fully qualified and not available for all Member States to use but indicated that the SFR II test tools would be available for the purpose of the comprehensive test.

CATS

1. Adoption of the provisional agenda

The agenda has been approved.

2. Data Retention Directive

- Presentation by the Commission of the preliminary findings of the impact assessment

The Commission provided details of the process that it had started to review the Data Retention Directive, through workshops and consultations. In the course of that review process, the Commission had identified the following three problems with the current legal framework.

The first problem was the tension with the requirements flowing from the rights of privacy and data protection, in particular related to the lack of predictability of the purposes for which telecom data might be used.

The second problem related to the wider regulatory framework applicable to the telecom sector and the very substantial financial costs that telecom operators incurred as a consequence of the Data Retention Directive. The different Member States rules on whether and the extent to which these costs were reimbursed were perceived as problematic.

A third series of problems related to the challenges that the implementation of the Directive posed to law enforcement authorities. Difficulties to rapidly exchange telecom data and the unavailability of some types of telecom data were among the factors cited in this regard.

The Commission stated that its reflection process was still ongoing and it was hence not in a position to indicate whether (and when) it could table a legislative proposal or seek otherwise to make law enforcement efforts in this area more concerted.

Several Member States intervened to express their qualm regarding any possible legislative proposal to amend the 2006 Directive and in particular the retention periods contained therein given the law enforcement need to access those data.

The PL and IT delegations withdrew their reservations on the document. Some delegations referred to the need to clarify the resources that would be necessary for the Centre to function, the exact scope of its activities and underlined the necessity for the Council to be involved in the follow-up to the establishment of the Centre.

The Chair concluded that the document would be modified and submitted to COREPER/Council for adoption.
