That framework isdesigned to curtail the economicburden on society by reducing theoverall costs associated with bankfailures. The use of taxpayers'money should, with theintroduction of a revisedframework, be significantlyreduced in order to ensure that theresolution financing arrangementis more often and more effectivelyused. |  |                 |

|           | (40) A single-tiered approach forthe priority ranking of depositsunder national laws governingnormal insolvency proceedingscontributes to a more efficient andless costly protection of all deposits.For covered deposits, that approachfacilitates the financing by the DGSof measures other than the payout ofcovered deposits, which can bemore effective and less disruptive inprotecting access to the depositedfunds as they do not lead to aninterruption of access to bankaccounts and payment services. Forthe deposits that are not covered,that approach facilitates theirprotection where necessary for theprotection of financial stability anddepositor confidence. Finally, byintroducing flexibility in the use ofthose potentially less costlymechanisms for depositorprotection, that approach minimisesthe immediate disbursement needsof the DGSs, thereby ensuring abetter preservation of their availablefinancing means in case other crisesoccur and decreasing the burden onthe banking sector, who are calledto replenish those funds. | deleted  | deleted   |                 |
