EDUCATION

Resolution on education and training in the European Semester

Education ministers adopted a Resolution on education and training in the European Semester: ensuring informed debates on reforms and investments.

Several delegations took the floor to emphasise the importance of increasing the financing for education and training and to highlight that the EU needed to reinforce cohesion through education, research and innovation.

Against the background of an increased importance of education and training in the European Semester process, the resolution reflects member states' commitment to further improving the quality and relevance of education and training with the aim to boost growth and jobs. It also ensures that education ministers are appropriately involved in the process.

The current European Semester for economic policy coordination started in December 2019 with the adoption of the Annual Growth Survey by the European Commission. In spring the Commission will propose Country-Specific Recommendations (CSRs) which will then be endorsed by the European Council in June 2020. All Council configurations contribute to the preparation of the European Council debates on the semester. The Resolution on education and training in the European Semester is the contribution from the EYCS (Education) Council to the process.

Brain circulation – a driving force for the European Education Area¹ (policy debate)

In a public session, ministers discussed ways of achieving a balanced brain circulation² in the EU. Based on a steering note prepared by the presidency (Discussion paper), they were invited to share their views in relation to the following questions:

- What mix of policies is necessary to ensure balanced brain circulation in the European Education Area and how can relevant players at local, regional and national level be mobilised to achieve this aim?
- What can be done at national and European levels to further support the European Universities initiative's strong potential to contribute towards balanced brain circulation in the European Education Area?
- How can European funds, programmes and funding instruments be used to develop and implement policies that would, consequently, enhance balanced brain circulation? Do you have any national examples of measures that you implement?

² Brain circulation is the possibility for developing countries to draw on the skills, know-how and other forms of experience gained by their migrants - whether they have returned to their country of origin or not - and members of their diaspora. Ministers highlighted that freedom of movement was a fundamental principle of the EU and that the benefits of learning mobility were clear. They agreed that Europe as a whole needed to become more attractive in order to retain or attract talented and skillful people. Ministers also stressed that the issue of brain circulation could not be addressed successfully by the education sector only and that demography and the particularities of the labour market had also to be taken into account. Delegations identified several possible measures and actions to counter brain drain¹ and brain waste and to support a balanced brain circulation:

- automatic mutual recognition of diplomas and qualifications
- equal pay for researchers, in particular within the framework of the Marie Skłodowska-Curie Actions
- national plans for the reintegration of young researchers
- targeted use of EU funds and programmes, such as Erasmus+, Horizon Europe, etc.

Ministers also highlighted the importance of supporting the European Universities initiative and further developing the European Education Area.

Green education and training for a sustainable Europe (informal discussion)

During a ministerial lunch, ministers reflected on the European Green Deal and possible education and training policies at national and EU level. They also discussed synergies with other relevant policy areas, in order to contribute to sustainable development.

Any other business

The presidency informed ministers on the state of play of the post-2020 strategic framework for European cooperation in education and training (5533/20). Ministers highlighted the value of the current ET2020 framework for member states. They also called for a holistic approach, involving all education and training sectors and levels, as well as all contexts of learning, to the further development of the cooperation framework and the preparation of the proposal for the European Education Area.
