Irish Oysters

Oysters have long been a delicacy in Ireland, with oyster cultivation on the island dating back to the 13th century.

Ireland's climate and coastline aid the growth of both Irish rock oysters and native flat oysters, with taste varying depending on the bay in which they are grown. All have a high meat content and a sweet yet salty taste. The oyster harvest is celebrated each September at the Galway International Oyster and Seafood Festival, which has been running since 1954. Thousands of visitors attend the festival to eat oysters and witness, or even compete in, the world oyster opening (or 'shucking') championships.
