Black pudding

Black pudding is a traditional Irish food made from pork blood and pork fat, distinctive from other blood sausages by its high cereal content which creates a crumbly texture.

Oatmeal or barley are the most common cereals used, which are combined with spices and seasonings before being filled into natural casings. One example is Sneem Black Pudding (PGI) which has a deep red-brown colour and a smooth, almost mousse-like texture compared to other Irish black puddings. Black pudding is a staple of a Full Irish breakfast, which includes sausage, bacon, egg, tomato, toasted bread and baked beans.

Black pudding has been recognised for its versatility in recent years and is now a common feature on restaurant dinner menus.
