11a			(2a) Criminal organisations usually reinvest part of their profits from criminal activities to create a financial base enabling them to continue those activities. In addition, criminal organisations often resort to violence, threats or intimidation in order to acquire the control or management of economic activities, concessions, authorisations, procurement and public services, or to achieve illicit profits or advantages, thereby adversely affecting the freedom of competition, or to prevent or to hinder the free exercise of the right to vote or to otherwise alter voting results in elections, thus affecting democratic life. Organised crime has therefore become an economic worldwide operator with an entrepreneurial vocation and specialised in both the legal and illegal supply of goods and services. While the provision on extended confiscation is only applicable when a person is convicted of a criminal offence, in which case property belonging to that person can be ordered where the court is satisfied that the property is derived from criminal conduct, the provision on confiscation of unexplained wealth applies irrespective of the outcome of the investigation in relation to an offence that triggered its
